

Figure 1 Example of a satellite image of an enormous volcanic plume. This image was acquired by the Japanese GMS satellite in the visible part of the spectrum. The plume is from the June 1991 eruption of Pinatubo in the Philippines. At the time this image was acquired, the plume covered an area several hundred thousand square kilometers.